

Happy Holidays,

December 2010

I hope this short letter finds you happy and healthy. I am extremely busy right now working with my advocate, Morrison, to get the truth out in my case and a bit tight on time so please forgive that my holiday greetings are not as personal as normal. This is my favorite time of year and I couldn't let it pass without saying hello.

Kyle is getting so big. I fear that in calendar year 2011 his new nickname for me will be "shrimp". I've accepted this as inevitable and find comfort in knowing that it will be a couple more years before he can beat me in thumb wrestling. Kyle loves to read, play video games, and spend time with family. I am ever grateful that strong family support helps keep Kyle and I extremely close. He is an amazing person and wise beyond his years. He never seems to run out of profound things to say.

In addition to doing a tremendous amount of work to help Morrison establish our website over the past year, I've tried to stay productive in other ways. I've been working with a small group of inmates to set up programs to help younger inmates who will soon be re-entering society. In addition, I took part in a theatre production for the inmate population. (Yes, you are reading this correctly.) Obviously this was far outside my comfort zone but that was the point. Hard for me to inspire Kyle to try new things if I don't "put" myself out there.

The first part of 2010 ushered Morrison Bonpasse into my life. Since Morrison has become involved a comprehensive website detailing everything available about my life, trial, and wrongful conviction was set up. Morrison found a very important DNA test report that we had never seen, collecting dust in the Maine State Police archives. I also took and passed a lie detection test. If you haven't already gone to the website please check it out sometime. We'd love to hear your thoughts. chadevanswronglyconvicted.org Morrison has brought direction that was previously missing and I'm hoping for the start of good things in 2011. It will be a battle but armed with support for our committees in Keene and Rochester and having truth on our side, I have confidence that has been lacking.

Thank you for your support for my family and me over the years. I hope you have a great holiday season and a safe New Year. I'd love to hear from you when you have a chance.

With Love,

Chad
